

Aircraft remain one of the precious few places in the public where one can briefly escape the chatter of cell phone users. To be "trapped" on a 4 hour flight surrounded by multiple "can you hear me now's" as cell networks hand-off each caller is a horror I cannot even contemplate. What's more, in such close proximity and without any escape, one must be concerned about the still-being-studied effects of cell phone signal radiation. Please protect the sanity and health of the flying public by keeping a ban on cell phone use aboard airborne aircraft.
